FOR CAPON SHIPPERS

Early in the season when fresh killed chickens are soft meat and fancy the demand for capons is limited but just as soon as the fresh chickens commence to get coarse meat, hard and staggy, high class trade turns to capons. Dealers want fancy, however, and rather than buy a poor capon, trade is inclined to stick to the coarse chickens. It is important, therefore, that capon shippers should have their stock of fancy quality, as otherwise the capons will not go into high class channels and high prices are out of the question, as ordinary trade will pay little or no more for a poor capon than for a coarse chicken. Some buyers would not pay as much, on account of the feathers which many retailers consider a nuisance because of the increased labor. In some
